Position: Forward a member of the basketball game the Miller family has a home in the Hall of Fame, and it's not Fast Talking Reggie; Cheryl Miller's older sister beat her to the fist when she was induced in 1995. Cheryl's promotions became the first woman to be immersed in the organized game, a four-time All-American college and three-time national player of the year and a member of the gold medal-winning Olympic team in 1984. 6'3, 150-pound guard and forward, Miller excels in almost any case of the game, from scoring (he once had 105 points in a high school game) to rebounds (12.0 per game in college) to passing to defense. Jet magazine called her the ultimate innovator of women's basketball... Miller was born January 3, 1964 in Riverside, California, a five-year-old middle child in a family that thrived in sports. His older brother Darrell played in major league baseball, and Reggie grew up in the NBA. Cheryl dominated the high school competition, shattering virtually every state goalscoring record, including the highest average in a season (37.5 points a game). He scored 105 points against Notre Vista High School in a 179-15 victory over Riverside in 1982. Midway through the game, he threw down a one-hand dunk. No woman had ever been immersed in a game. At the University of Southern California, Miller led the Troy women to their first and sopho year national championships, and she played in her senior season championship game. In 1986, she became the first woman to be nominated for the Sullivan Award, given to the country's top amateur athlete. He scored 3,018 points at USC and retired his Jersey Number, the first for any basketball player, male or female, at school. Miller suffered a knee injury in a pickup game in 1987, then suffered another knee injury in the 1988 Olympic tests, forcing him to retire from the game at the age of 24. He returned to his Alma Matter in 1993 as head coach, stayed for two seasons, then left to continue working in the broadcast. I'm a metric based, says Jimmy Miller, formerly general electric controller and chief accounting officer. I start with the result--increase productivity, reduce scrap and cost--and then run towards it. In the past year, he helped launch the General Electric SmartOutage initiative, in which sensors collect real-time data from industrial machines and provide forecasters during reactive maintenance. Inside, he put tablets in the hands of field workers and is implementing Perdyxy, a software platform that takes over the entire company, even those tireless sensors, speaking a common language. Photo: Getty Images; Imaxtree there are many new, young designers showing up at New York Fashion Week every season that one can argue that it's just as hard to stay relevant once you get there as it is to break in. Nicole Miller, who in September every year since 1999 (when she became the first American to stage a pre-Paris show) first showcased her spring 2012 summer collection at Lincoln Center last night and was like a pencil with which she designed the clothes with which she was injected with a breath of fresh air. Miller's outfit is something of a stapler - she's constantly flattering, but predictably dressed in a party like a strapless black number, above left, since 2002. Now he seems to be interested in attracting a slightly younger demographic. With x-inspired games the collection loaded with bright colors, zippers, neoprene and practical three ways and Miller's jacket showed less exercise to his everyday dressing skills. Black may never get old, but it's hard to make it look fresh; Miller drew it with a black dress above right.
